It said that in case the Greek government does not adhere to the demands presented it will be solely responsible for the events which may follow.

The note also points out that demobilization of the Greek army must be complete and immediate. The allies demanded replacement of the Skouloudis ministry with a cabinet which would give all guarantees for observance of friendly neutrality toward the entente, in harmony with the engagements of the Greek government. First Intention Was Refusal.

Before it became known that Greece had decided to yield it was said in government circles that it would be an mpossibility to accede to the demands. Agemnon Schliemann, former Greek minister at Washington, and now a member of the chamber of deputies, on being asked what the government intended to do replied: "How can we voluntarily renounce the sovereignty of our country?"

The action of the entente powers came on one of the hottest days of many years in Greece. Athens was darkened, the long was at Chateau Tatoy, shops were goved and the ministries were deserted when the blow fell. The people were unaware what had occurred until well on toward evening, when newspapers and handbills, distributed broadcast, made known the text of the demands.

Meanwhile King Constantine returned hastily to Athens. All the troops in the city were ordered under arms. The deputies were summoned to the chamber, where Premier Skouloudis announced that he had resigned. The chamber adjourned immediately, cheering the retiring ministers as they left the building.

The people of Athens remained calm, and talk of non-compliance with the demands of, the allies apparently awakened no widespread spirit of resistance. being asked what the government in-tended to do replied: "How can we vol-

Conflicting Stories on Clash Between Carranza Troops and U. S. Cavalry.

INDICATIONS POINT TO AMBUSH OF AMERICANS

Location of Fighting Raises Question of Gen. Pershing's Dispatching Patrol So Far From Base.

At the War Department today there was no disposition to conceal the anxiety which has been caused by the Mexican reports of the battle at Carrizal between Carranza troops and American cavalrymen belonging to Gen. Pershing's column. No clear view of what had happened could be obtained from the Mexican statement transmitted from the border. There are several stories of the fight, which conflict, but which seem to indicate on the whole that the Americans were trapped or ambushed and suffered their principal losses from nachine-gun fire.

It is presumed at the War Department that Gen. Pershing promptly dispatched reinforcements, including artillery, to aid the cavalry detachment, if its lines of retirement were menaced.

American Strength Unrevealed. Officials expressed entire confidence in the ability of Gen. Pershing to maintain his position in any emergency. The War Department has never revealed the numerical strength of the column in Mexico, but it is believed to be between 10,000 and 12,000 men

The expedition also includes a considerable proportion of field and mountain artillery and a full complement of machine gun companies and troops. It has ample supplies of ammunition and has had sufficient time to dig itself in at every point where intrenchment was thought necessary.

The location of the scene of the reported fighting cast doubt upon the accuracy of the Mexican account, in the minds of army officers. They consider it doubtful that with the existing strained relations Gen. Pershing would invite attack by dispatching a patrol as far as Carrizal, which is sixty miles from his base camp. There have been no indications prior to this that scouting parties were operating outside of
